Contents

Introduction ............................................................................ 9

Chapter One

The Foundations Of A Happy Marriage .................................. 15
A Sound Choice .................................................................... 16

Religion Should Be The Primary Factor When One Chooses A Spouse ................................................... 20

Shared Duties ....................................................................... 24

It Is Compulsory For A Woman To Serve Her Husband ....... 25

It Is Compulsory For A Woman To Obey Her Husband ........ 27

He Is Nothing More Than Your Paradise And Your Hell-fire 29

To Obey One’s Husband Is Like Performing Jihad ............... 29

It Is Recommended For A Man To Help His Wife In Household Related Work And Chores ...................... 31

Kindness And Patience In Dealing With One’s Wife .......... 32

Overlooking At Least Some Of A Woman’s Faults .................. 36

Whenever A Man Desires Sexual Relations, His Wife Must Not Refuse Him .................................................. 37

Without Due Cause, A Man Should Not Break Off Ties From His Wife; And He Must Not Be Negligent In Satisfying Her Sexual Needs .................................................. 41

When Is It Permissible For A Man To Stay Away From His Wife’s Bed? ...................................................... 44
A Woman Must Take Part In The Preliminaries Of Sexual Relations......................................................... 45
When She Has To Choose Between Voluntary Acts Of Worship And Her Husband’s Needs, A Woman Should Give Precedence To The Latter........................................ 46
A Woman Must Not Describe The Beauty Of Another Woman To Her Husband........................................ 49
It Is Forbidden, Upon Both Husband And Wife, To Divulge Their Intimate Bedroom Secrets To A Third Party............................................................. 52
Cleanliness And Adornment.................................................................................................................. 54
  Moderation Is Required.................................................................................................................. 58
Striking One’s Wife: To What Degree Is Doing So Permissible Or Disliked........................................... 59
The Best Job For A Woman................................................................................................................ 61
How A Woman Should Treat Her In-Laws........................................................................................... 63
Choose Righteous Friends And Stay Away From Evil Companions...................................................... 69
To Bring A Female Servant Into One’s Home Is A Dangerous Proposition Indeed!............................ 70
Don’t Undress Outside Of The Home.................................................................................................... 72
Don’t Delve Into Your Husband’s Past.................................................................................................. 74
Avoid Arousing The Suspicion Of Others.............................................................................................. 75
The Importance Of Prudent Spending On The Part Of Husband And Wife.......................................... 76
Justice Between Wives....................................................................................................................... 79
Lawful Games And Entertainment........................................................................................................ 80

Contents

Chapter Two

Some Of The Causes Of Marital Discord................................................................. 83
Al-Ghairah.................................................................................................................. 85
  Jealousy And False Suspicion Lead To Marital Discord, And Perhaps Even To The Dissolution Of A Marriage................................................................. 88
  A Man’s Ghairah........................................................................................................ 93
The Evils Of The Tongue............................................................................................ 99
The Satellite Dish, Playing Cards, And Other Frivolous Diversions......................... 105
Harshness And Rough Treatment Of One’s Wife...................................................... 107
Deviation From The Purposes Of Marriage........................................................................ 109
Miserliness And Greed............................................................................................... 115
The Nature Of A Man Or Woman’s Work..................................................................... 118
When A Husband Meddles In His Wife’s Business.................................................... 119
Procreation.................................................................................................................. 120
Other Causes Of Marital Discord................................................................................ 124
The Foundations Of A Happy Marriage

One of the main goals of marriage in Islam is to achieve a happy union between husband and wife. We have to understand what a happy marriage means, what a happy marriage entails, and what are the means to achieving a happy marriage. Certainly, a happy marriage, in the Islamic sense, is not achieved merely through sexual relations. True, a healthy sex life between husband and wife plays an important role in achieving a happy marriage, but there are other factors as well – such as both parties living a stable life, physically, mentally, and even economically. Other factors include compatibility in terms of personality and a common view in religious matters.

Islam has laid the foundations that, if applied, help guarantee a stable married life. Some of those foundations are described in this chapter.
A Sound Choice

The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said:

"A woman is married for four (qualities or possessions): for her wealth, for her (honorable) lineage, for her beauty, and for her religion. So succeed in acquiring the woman of religion: Yadak (You will then profit and succeed; or this expression is used to encourage people to do something – in this case, to marry a woman who practices the teachings of Islam)."

This Hadith indicates that in all affairs, and in marriage particularly (since a person is choosing not a temporary companion but a lifelong companion) one should make religion one’s priority over all else.

Religion is the yardstick by which one should choose his spouse. But this does not mean that a woman’s other qualities are unimportant. If a woman is rich, her husband may, with her consent, spend from her wealth. And if two women are equal in their religious devoutness, one should choose the more beautiful of the two. On the other hand, one should not choose a non-religious beautiful woman over a religious woman who is not beautiful. Ibn ‘Amr narrated that the Prophet ﷺ said:

"Do not marry women for their beauty: perhaps their beauty will lead to their destruction. Nor should you marry them for their wealth: perhaps their wealth will lead them to exceed the proper bounds (and become high-handed). Instead, marry them for (their) religion. And a Kharmā (one whose nose is partly cut off and whose ear is partly punctured), black female-slave who applies the (teachings of the) religion is better (than another woman who, though she may be better looking, does not apply the teachings of the religion)."

In our society today, religious-minded men, for the most part, search for women who have a similar outlook. Most problems in this regard arise when two non-religious-minded people marry, and then one of them is guided to the truth. Perhaps the factor that leads to most failures in marriage is for a husband and wife to have not opposite, for that is not the right word, but clashing personalities and habits.

Therefore, both man and woman should learn as much as

---

[1] Al-Bukhārī (5090), Muslim (1466), Abu Dāwūd (2032), An-Nasā’ī (6/68), Ibn Mājah (1858), Ad-Dārīmī (2170), Ahmad (2/428), Al-Baḥqāqī (7/79), and Ibn Hibbān (4025, 4026).

[2] Though, of course, this is near impossible to measure.
they can about their prospective spouse. It is the responsibility of the families of both parties to openly declare all relevant information about their relative that is trying to get married. Doing so is in everyone’s best interest, for openness at the outset is better than failure in the end. A girl’s family knows her quirks and habits more than anyone else, and the same can be said about a man’s family. Women are better qualified to speak about one from their sex, just as men are better qualified to speak about one from their sex.

In spite of what I have just said, people who are Islamically engaged (which simply means that a proposal has been accepted, but the marriage has not yet taken place) should not mix in a manner that is contrary to the teachings of Islam. By dating or mixing in a non-Islamic manner, two people will not really get to know each other better. A man can date a woman for 2 years, yet he will still know nothing about her quirks and foibles. He only sees her when she is at her best, and then after marriage, he learns of her many faults (and vice versa); hence the high divorce rate in Western countries. It is a girl’s family members (since they have known her for her entire life) who are best qualified to give a clear depiction of her character to a prospective suitor. And it is a man’s family members who are best qualified to give a clear depiction of his character to the girl to whom he is proposing and to her guardian.

Islam permits a man to know firsthand, prior to marriage, about the physical attributes of his prospective wife; of course, certain conditions must be fulfilled. Abu Hurairah reported that a man went to the Prophet ﷺ and informed him that he married a woman from the Ansâr (the native inhabitants of Al-Madinah). The Prophet ﷺ asked him:

يدتي؟

"Did you see her?"

He said, “No.” The Prophet ﷺ said:

"Then go and look at her, for indeed, there is something in the eyes of the (people of the) Ansâr."[1]

The people of knowledge disagree about the meaning of, “For indeed, there is something in the eyes of the (people of the) Ansâr.” Some say that they were bleary-eyed; others maintain that their eyes were small; and yet others say that they had blueness in their eyes. In the narration of Abu ‘Awânah in his Mustakhraj, the Hadith contains the following addition: “Verily, their eyes are small.” Based on this narration, the strongest view is that the Prophet ﷺ was referring to the smallness of their eyes.

When Al-Mughirah bin Shu’bah proposed to a woman, the Prophet ﷺ said to him:

"Look at her, for indeed, doing so will make it more likely for your (marriage) together to last longer."[2]

[1] Muslim (1424), Ahmad (2/ 76, 299), and Ibn Hibbân (4030).
[2] Ahmad (4/245, 246), At-Tirmidhî (1087), Ad-Dârimi (2172), An-Nasâî (7/6), Ibn Mâjah (1865), and Ibn Hibbân (4032).